Tom: Your nose looks so red. Have you had a fever?
Bob: Take it easy! I just came back from a five-day holiday on Little Liuqiu Island(小琉球). It was very hot, and I got a little sunburned.
Tom: Oh, I see. Did you have a good time there?
Bob: Yes, it was great. What I enjoyed most during the trip was to swim with the green sea turtles. They were big, about 90 to 100 cm long, and they looked friendly.
Tom: Did you touch one?
Bob: Of course not! I was afraid to be bitten. Most importantly, they are protected animals. You could be fined up to NT$300,000 for disturbing one. If you have a chance to go into the sea to see them, never go after them, touch them, or feed them. Be sure to stay quiet.
Tom: Did you take pictures of them?
Bob: Sure. I found some sea turtles near Beauty Cave（美人洞）, where they are often seen looking for food like sea grasses. To get near and take photos of them, I followed the 5s rule—stop, see, slow, slow, slow.
Tom: That sounds like the "red light, green light" game we played when we were little.

With the Internet becoming more and more popular, most people are in the habit of reading online reviews before going out for dinner, taking a trip, or when shopping online. Many of the reviews are helpful, and they give useful information about a product, a restaurant, or a hotel. However, studies show that millions of online reviews are fake.

Why are there so many fake reviews online? It is because good reviews are important to businesses, and they can help bring in more customers and more money. To make more profits, many companies write fake reviews about themselves, and others give free samples or discounts to get five-star reviews.

It is not easy to tell real reviews from fake ones. However, there are some tips that might help. First, fake reviews are written to trick people, so they are often too good to be true. Second, those reviews that are very short or have some spelling mistakes in them might have been written by someone who has been paid to write them. Third, fake reviews are often left in a short period of time. If you notice any of these, beware, because it might fool you into buying a new product or going to a restaurant that is not as good as it is said online.

Next time you read the reviews online, think twice. It is wise not to believe all of them.

Nina	Is Smith Fish Market good? I just moved to Beaver Town. Does anyone know about Smith Fish Market? I want to go there to buy some seafood with my family this weekend. Thanks!
Nicedoris	RE: Is Smith Fish Market good? My family likes seafood, so I go to Smith Fish Market twice a week. Every time I go there, I buy two kilos of shrimps. They aren’t cheap. They’re NT$450 a kilo. But if you go there in the evening on weekday, they’re NT$50 cheaper per kilo.

Ilove908	RE: Is Smith Fish Market good? I never buy fish in Danny’s Supermarket. We like Smith Fish Market. I’ve enjoyed its fish and crabs since I was a little boy. Do go shopping there often.

There are more than four million English words used around the world now, and it is difficult to know all the words. Are there any easier ways to help us learn as many English words as possible? Of course! One of them is to have a great knowledge of prefixes, roots, and suffixes- prefixes are added to the beginnings of the words, roots are the main part of the words that give their basic meanings, and suffixes are added to the end of the words. Let's see some examples:

Prefixes: "un, in, dis" → not ; "sym" → same; " tele" → far
Suffixes: "-er,-or,-ist" → someone who does (the work)
" -ion" → make verbs become nouns
Roots: "view/vis" → to see or look ; "path" → feeling

Words which have several syllables may be made up of "prefix+root," such as "sympathy." "__31__," such as television.

Prefixes, roots, and suffixes help us not only to remember some English words but to guess or understand the meanings of words more easily. For example, if you are UNABLE to do something, you are not able to do it. Now, do you find it not that difficult to know a word?
